Acute care volunteers needed in Haliburton

JENN WATT
County Life Editor

For many years, volunteers were recruited for friendly visiting in long-term care, but up until now there wasn't anything similar for acute care.

Haliburton Highlands Health Services along with the Haliburton Hospital Auxiliary is organizing a new crew of volunteers to commit to short visits doing the simple things that can make someone's day much better.

It could be bringing someone a newspaper, reading to them, refilling their water or helping them participate in programming.

"We're in the process of getting it going," said Jacqui Clarkson, president of the auxiliary. "We're finding as more and more people are retiring here, more and more people are looking for avenues in how they can use their energies and their interests."

She hopes some of them - 10 to 15 of them, she hopes - will be interested in giving a couple hours here and there to help out.

Brigitte Gebauer, volunteer co-ordinator for Community Support Services at HHHS, said currently there are no activities happening in acute care, which can make afternoons boring for some. Having volunteers there to bring some cheer would do a world of good. They can also bring the patients into Highland Wood long-term care home to participate in their programming.

Volunteers would be needed afternoons from 1 to 3 p.m. and two evenings a week, Mondays and Thursdays, which are movie and bingo nights. Afternoons can be the hardest to get through, Clarkson and Gebauer said. Mornings typically include bathing, breakfast and lunch as well as any therapy that needs to be done. Afternoons, however, typically have less activity.

This new volunteer opportunity is also good for young people considering a career in medicine. Volunteering will allow them to see what it's like behind the scenes.

In the future, Clarkson would also like to see volunteers working in the emergency department, helping patients in the waiting room by providing a friendly face and answers to common questions, like where the cafeteria is.

Volunteers for acute care need to go through the same process that other HHHS volunteers do, which includes orientation, a police check and a health review, which includes a TB test and checking that vaccinations are up to date.

Clarkson is an active volunteer already, through the auxiliary and with the Grandmothers to Grandmothers organization, and she said what motivates her is the positive feedback loop that is created when you do something nice for someone else.

"They were happy and I'm happy because they're happy. There's a lot to be said about that," she said.

Gebauer confirmed that research backs up that observation.

"Anytime you go out and do volunteer work you're in a better frame of mind," she said.

For more information about this new volunteer opportunity, contact Brigitte Gebauer at 705-457-1392 extension 2927 or email volunteering@hhhs.ca.

Scout Reserve historical kiosk project moving forward

DARREN LUM
County Life Staff

The history of the Haliburton Scout Reserve property came alive with a presentation from Ken Wrigglesworth at the Haliburton County Historical Society's meeting on Thursday, June 21 at the Haliburton Highlands Museum.

The former reserve staff member and youth camper, who has a fondness for the property and a passion for the past, spoke about the key historical points for the area and the individuals who settled and lived here in the 19th and early 20th century, after the First Nations. They included trapper Len Holmes, whose canoe is still where he left it, and families with the surnames of Neelis, Pollard, Spiers, Hadleys and Beamish.

Wrigglesworth's discoveries came while researching the history of the reserve's 5,000-acre property 12 kilometres east of the village of Haliburton for a service project to honour and pay respect to the past. The project is part of the reserve's 75th anniversary which will happen in 2022. The motivation was to encourage Scouts to get away from the main lake and out onto the rest of the property.

The past year, Wrigglesworth has read old documents from the land registry office, examined census records and interviewed locals.

Challenges with this research included undocumented land ownership (apparently in the 19th century, the land registry office was too far and some deals were verbally agreed upon between family); different surname spellings among family members due to illiteracy; or just inaccurate information such as the wrong ages recorded.

The Neelises, the Pollards and the Spierses all lived on lot 16 at one time or another.

It's worth noting that what the reserve property is today is comprised of 1,500 lots.

At one time the single 100 acre lot cost $200 or $2 per acre. A small sum even then.

However, some families were known to not buy anything and lived there without permission.

Wrigglesworth revealed a tapestry of interconnected lives and found a colourful history little known until his work.

Wrigglesworth said the service project is on schedule to meet its goal to have 10 completed kiosks, including one to honour the First Nations people. They will be located at sites related to where homesteads were, lumber camps and other places of significance.

The plan is to erect two kiosks a year. With two already done, filled with photos, information and artifacts found in the area or relevant to the era, the plan is to complete two more next summer and then average two more a year until completion for 2022.

So far there are two kiosk roofs completed with two being made now and enough material for two more.

He will apply for an Ontario Trillium grant to purchase more material for the remaining kiosks.

More artifacts will be needed.

The Haliburton Highlands Museum has offered a few already. However, the public can help with donations of broken farm tools; trapping, logging and lumber equipment; or photos related to the families that settled on the land.

Wrigglesworth said the First Nations kiosk will have input from David Beaucage Johnson.

Johnson, who recently graduated from Trent University and is a resident of Curve Lake First Nation, is working on a project with the Haliburton Highlands Museum to enhance knowledge of the area's Indigenous history. This project is a partnership fostered by U-Links Centre for Community-Based Research.

"We have support from people in the community from this academic, who has First Nations heritage who wrote a thesis about the Mississauga people in the Highlands," he said.

Wrigglesworth's wish list includes information and anything related to David Pollard, the Nugents, Mrs. Mary Jane Hadley, wife to Isaac Hadley and younger sister to Francis and Bill. She was born in Manvers, but lived with Isaac in Haliburton where Canoe FM is now. She died in 1935.

He expects someone to have a photo of Pollard, who lived and had a career in Gooderham, served in the First World War as a telegraph operator and then worked as a teacher and lived in the area.

Wrigglesworth welcomes any information.

"If people have any family pictures they can contribute from any of those families that I mentioned," he said.

Wrigglesworth wasn't certain about public access at this time. However, he thought there might be a possibility during alumni weekend in 2022 when all the kiosks are completed.

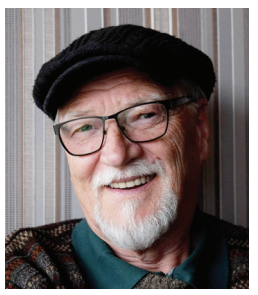
A Cello is Born at the Rails End Gallery

IT'S NOT EVERY day I get to see a birth via video, but thanks to my partner Michelle, who used her phone to capture Bethany Houghton giving her new cello its birthing voice, I was able to experience the dulcet tones of that lovely "baby."



GEORGE FARRELL
On Arts

The occasion was a soft opening of the exhibition called Making Music: The Luthier's Craft. The show is the brainchild of Rails End curator Laurie Jones, who had the concept of showcasing handcrafted musical instruments made by people she knows. The result is a show that features guitars, violins, cellos and violas, in ready-to-play state, and at various stages of their construction. Four of the instrument makers live in our county and two live in Toronto.

"People don't spend enough time appreciating musical instruments," Jones said. "People just don't look at them; they just usually listen to them. I wanted people to experience the form, colour and lustre of these instruments and see them as works of art in, and of themselves."

Jones, after hitting on the concept, immediately thought of local luthier Houghton, who makes her own instruments and plays cello, viola and violin. Houghton was on board with the concept and contributed several instruments, including the unstained and unvarnished new cello she calls Honeybee, which she played at the opening.

Before playing Honeybee (Houghton names all her instruments, and even incorporates little carvings into the design), there was an unveiling, and as the black drape was removed to reveal the pale cello, toasts were offered in celebration of its coming into the world.

In the video I saw Houghton playing the pallid instrument, which looked somehow modern in its unfinished state. Even on the phone the tones from Honeybee, in response to Houghton's practiced prompting, sounded full and lively; and an appreciative audience of 45 looked on.

When I saw the exhibition a few days after the opening I saw that there were other instruments on display in addition to the cello, viola and violins made by Houghton. Ken Loney has contributed two instruments, a tenor ukulele and a guitar made from black walnut and spruce. Wendy Evenden has loaned a finished violin, and one which is a work in progress. Ernie Demuth, Loney and Houghton all worked on a blue, Les Paul-style guitar they named Oak Tree.

Twin brothers, Nick and Tim Frank are the other luthiers contributing to the show. They're both from Toronto, and the Haliburton connection is curator Jones herself. "The two leapt to mind because they made their first guitar in the shed of the Toronto Island Canoe Club," Jones said. She lives on the island when she's not in the Highlands, and she's the Commodore of the club.

The Franks have gone on to be famous makers of guitars and their instruments are much in demand. When they heard about Jones's concept for an exhibition of instruments they said they had to be included. "You are part of our story," they told Jones.

The show is mounted with panache, with instruments suspended, and seemingly floating in air, and others plinthed creatively. But what makes the show complete is the clever inclusion of sound; not just the playing at the opening by Houghton and friends, but by a simply-constructed interactive circuit board that enables people, with the push of a button, to hear the sound which each instrument makes.

Jones gives credit to Noelia Marziali and the Maker Hub at the Dysart library branch for helping out with the design and construction of the musical sound-maker. Jones also said that the sounds are run through the gallery's new sound system, which was partly funded by HCDC. It was the first time the new system had been used, so in essence there were two audio births at the gallery opening on July 6. The new system sounded "bright and beautiful and the (instrument) sounds filled every crevice of the gallery," Jones said. "It's a sensory experience."

While people can feel free to push the buttons to hear the individual sounds of each instrument, there are also plans for more, informal, short musical performances, featuring the playing of the instruments on certain Friday afternoons. These performance dates have not yet been determined, but you can experience Making Music: The Luthier's Craft Tuesday through Saturday, until Aug.18. Admission is free.

The Rails End Gallery is located at 23 York St, Haliburton. For more information about the show phone the gallery at 705-457-2330.

Top 10 camping disasters

CAMPING IS A fun and wholesome activity – until, of course, you go. The problem with camping is that it is fraught with potential disasters. Here are 10 common ones to avoid.

1. A hole in your tent: this is probably the worst thing that can happen on a camping trip. A hole allows biting insects to visit and causes eye injuries to fellow campers who peek into your tent.
2. Bears: aside from chili night, are the worst thing that can happen to a campsite, primarily because they put holes in tents – though on chili night that's not so bad.
3. A bear running off with your beer cooler: this is also a major disaster since, as far as I know, wrestling with wildlife is illegal.
4. Two things: Too much wind. Too few tent pegs.
5. Two more things: Too much wind. Open flames.
6. Simultaneously forgetting what toilet paper and poison ivy look like.
7. Realizing, after waking up in a puddle, that your tent doesn't leak.
8. Finding out the night owl at the next campsite brought a guitar.
9. Finding out, a little too late, how expensive that guitar actually was.
10. Realizing the thing you ate off the end of a stick was not a marshmallow.

Community collaboration for kids

A boy with Point in Time's summer camp cools off during the Kids, Cops and Canadian Tire Fishing Days event on Wednesday, July 4 in Haliburton. With close to 100 children at Head Lake Park, this event was made possible by the MNRF, OPP and its auxiliary, Haliburton Bus Lines, Outdoors Plus, and HHOA for their donations, and voluteering. The young participants were part of daycares organized by Wee Care, Point in Time, and Ontario Early Years Centre. Special thanks to Canadian Tire Minden owner Terry Gregorini for donating fishing rods for the raffle, and Dysart's Andrea Mueller for helping with one of the activities. This event is about getting kids outside, on the water, and active. It ended with a barbecue and included different activity stations such as fishing, boating, and inspecting insects and wildlfe./DARREN LUM Staff

Haliburton Market offers hub for vendors

SUE TIFFIN
County Life Staff

The former Sears Haliburton building on Hwy 118 is opening its doors again.

The building, which sits on the property where former Sears Haliburton owners Adrian and Wendy Vargas launched Mega Munch Breakfast and Lunch this past May, reopened on July 14 as Haliburton Market, a flea market with about 18 booths inside and options for sale tables outside.

"We've been pretty busy, non-stop, since we've opened," said Vargas of the popular food truck his family operates. "So much local support since we've opened, which is so reassuring. Repeat customers, we have people two to three times a day, which is awesome."

The truck, which serves up specialties like homemade empanadas, burgers and churros is now open seven days a week, from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m.

"I will not name names," he laughed. "I've told people I won't name them, but yes, they are here three times a day."

Mega Munch Breakfast and Lunch was getting so much traffic, that the Vargas family brainstormed what could fill the space of the otherwise empty ground level of the Sears building. That's when the idea of a flea market came to mind.

"[We said] let's put this on Facebook and see what happens, and it just went viral," said Vargas. "So many good responses, and everyone wanted to get in there."

The Vargas family partnered with Rita McCarty, a long-time friend who Adrian said is a "go-getter," to manage the market. McCarty has experience organizing similar types of community sales in England, and is enthusiastic about the plan, which she said has been coming together quickly.

"Adrian said, what if we use this space as a flea market, and give people the opportunity in good weather and bad to pass along their treasures to someone else," said McCarty. "We went, OK, let's do it. And this was a week and a half ago."

The indoor and outdoor market will be air-conditioned and feature about 18 generous booth spaces indoors that each have electricity, which McCarty said would be beneficial if, for example, a realtor wanted to show their videos on a loop. Outside, garage sales could be held. The parking lot has ample space for visitors.

"We have so many talented people in this community, it's a shame for them to not be able to share their beautiful products," said McCarty. "They don't always have an outlet to do that."

Vendors will be able to set up on Friday evenings if they want, and those with heavy products, like antique furniture or wood carvings, will be able to keep their booths set up if they plan on being vendors each week, rather than lugging their merchandise around.

"It's a place that we can all get together, and all earn a little bit of money," said McCarty. "Whether it's someone who wants to sell their crafts, or someone who wants to clear out their junk, because as we all know, one man's trash is another man's treasure."

Five dollars from every vendor fee will be donated to the local Food For Kids program, which the Vargas family has supported for years. That means if a vendor signs up for 10 weeks, the Food for Kids program would benefit with a $50 donation. Vendors can book for the day, weekend, or season.

Additionally, the market has space on the walls for advertising, so that guests to the market will be able to see what else is available in the area, whether it be an event or a business.

The Haliburton Market plans to open until the Christmas season, offering shoppers the chance to buy locally.

"Everybody talks about shopping locally," said Vargas. "We want to give a place to advertise your local things that you make locally. It's all about the community. We're very big on the community, we've always said that."

In the future, Vargas also has plans to potentially bring an ice cream truck onto the site. A flower market currently also runs on the property.

"Hopefully this becomes a hub," said Vargas.

Haliburton Market celebrated a grand opening on July 14 at 13533 Highway 118 in Haliburton. Follow Haliburton Market on Facebook for updates.

Adding art to Haliburton's downtown banners

DARREN LUM
County Life Staff

Walking down Highland Street in Haliburton, take a look up and you'll see a slight change to the banners.

Included in the 31 rectangular BIA banners that depict local attractions and events will be 13 banners with paintings created by local artist Susan Hay.

Hay said it was an honour to have her paintings on public display and was excited when she learned about them going up following a public call out made by the BIA.

"It's a once in a lifetime opportunity," she said.

The colourful banners were raised in mid-May and depict a portion of three of her pieces with seasons central to each: Boice Bradley in Autumn, Shadow Shapes in Snow and Tranquility, which was a runner-up in the best in show category at a local juried exhibition.

Hay has been on the Haliburton County Studio Tour for the last five years. Her background includes a certificate from the Haliburton School of Art + Design.

BIA president Luke Schell said this effort was made to improve the overall aesthetic of the village.

The idea came up because the BIA wanted to beautify "where the streetscaping has been done on Highland Street" – from close to York Street to Maple Avenue.

Initially they thought three artists whose work possessed imagery of the Highlands could be used.

"We were thinking lakes, forests ... cliffs, rock. You know, typical Haliburton landscapes," he said. "From the call to artists we didn't get many as we hoped for, but one we did have was Susan Hay. We didn't have anyone to go with her look. We loved her look and we just asked her if we could use three pictures of hers, which we did," he said.

Schell is open to other artists' work showcased on the banners in the future once new banners are needed, which is typically close to three years on average, he said.

Local painter Susan Hay has her artwork showcased on 13 banners on Highland Street. The banners were put up mid-May and are part of a BIA initiative to beautify the village of Haliburton. /DARREN LUM Staff

Name That Studio - Haliburton Art and Craft Festival 2018

LAURIE JONES

Special to County Life

I was a young freelancer looking for a hook to hang my brand on when I came up with the name "Yabba Dabba Design". I just loved how it sounded. Happy, familiar, fun and easy to remember. But when I told a few people it fell flat. I realized there was nothing of me in that name, nor did it speak to the kind of clean graphic design work I was doing. But every time I tried to explain the name I ended up talking about The Flintstones. So in the end I went with my name - Laurie Jones.

I am telling you about my early branding exercise because I have been working on the online list of studios for Haliburton Art and Craft Festival and enjoying the eclectic mix of studio names. There are quite a few new ones, which is refreshing. And I just love some of their names! They pique my interest and I know that behind each name there will be a story. Creativity does not stop at the pottery wheel, the easel or the sewing machine for the artists behind studio names like Desserts and Skirts (I'm sure there is a good story there!), beadKrap, Snaffle & Mane, Twisted Twig, Clear Mind and others. I am looking forward to learning more about each of these monikers at the three-day festival which takes place July 27 to 29 in Head Lake Park.

Haliburton's public art gallery, Rails End Gallery and Arts Centre, brings art to life on a daily basis with exhibitions, programming and events. What a thrill it is to see some new artrepreneurs making their mark at Haliburton Art and Craft Festival! As the event organizer we are delighted to see more local artists participating in the festival this year. After a few years hiatus, Blackbird Pottery and Homestead Pottery are back in fine form. If you don't know them yet you should because each is achieving quite a reputation beyond the borders of Haliburton County! Another local studio new to the Festival is RooRoo Couture. Say this name out loud and you may guess the market this young designer creates for. Watch out for made up studio names like "Artech" that could earn you points in your next Haliburton County Scrabble game. It's a name that stands for a strong blend of technical skill and artful design. Ever wonder what "iag Designs" means? Maybe you will find out when you see this artist's wearable art at the Festival.

I am not suggesting that a good old fashioned first and last name doesn't make a good studio name. Look at Cori Lee Marvin Watercolour Artist. Her distinctive style is a brand in itself - the Cori Lee Marvin look. On the list of 125 participating artists you will find many are brand names in and of themselves. Come to think of it, there is a certain cachet to "Laurie Jones" don't you think?

I hope you will make Art in our Park part of your summer! Easy on the pedal!

A posted sign tells you more than the speed. It tells you pedestrians, cyclists & wildlife are in the area. If you're over the speed limit they are in danger and you could be facing a fine and demerit points. The faster you drive, the longer it takes to stop. Do the math.

Increased speed=Increased risk

Healthy donation

Food for Kids Haliburton County co-ordinator Aaron Walker, left, accepts a $900 cheque from the Haliburton Home and Cottage Show's manager Rick Ashall on Wednesday, July 11 in downtown Haliburton, as part of money fundraised at the annual event sponsored by the Haliburton Curling Club. Walker said this donation helps support a school for a month. He adds this year's program will cost $80,000 an increase of up to 15 per cent more than last year, which is mainly attributed to the increase to the cost of food. With many long-time volunteers not returning this year, he said, new volunteers will be needed. Food for Kids program enables up to 1,600 students to have access to healthy and nutritious food so they can be at their best to learn, but also develop life-long healthy eating practices. Board to build new school

VSS students will have own home in fall 1997

by PETER DOWNS
Staff Reporter

Victoria Street School students will have a brand new school to go to when theirs is closed down in two years.

The Haliburton County Board of Education has decided to build a separate school to replace VSS rather than making room for its students at J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary School with an addition.

Board members plan to have the new school, which will be located somewhere on the grounds surrounding JDHES, open for classes in September 1997, immediately after VSS has been abandoned.

"Parents of Victoria Street students have said they feel a separate school would be safer (than creating a larger school at JDHES)," said Dysart trustee Len Salvatori. "We have to start listening to the community. And what the community wants, we should be doing."

Since the board decided in May to close down 70-year-old VSS, parents have been lobbying the board to build a school just for primarily level students.

They have argued the "atmosphere" of a small, independent school would be lost at a larger school for students from Kindergarten to Grade 8.

Two weeks ago they asked the board to build a 12-room school with its own principal for students from Junior Kindergarten to Grade 3, including a library, activity room and a staff room with a full kitchen.

Tuesday night they got their wish when trustees voted 11-3 in favour of the plan. Anson, Hindon and Minden trustees Bryan Kernohan and Wally Bunn, as well as Glamorgan trustee Craig

Pettit, did not support the motion.

School board administrators have said the construction costs of such a school would be about

MNR still worried about fires

Five forest fires — including two unextinguished camp fires and one caused by Canada Day fireworks — kept local Ministry of Natural Resources crews busy Sunday.

A fire near the Leslie Frost Centre in Dorset, started by lightning, was still burning as of yesterday as were two others in the Bancroft area near fishing lakes. The Dorset-area blaze destroyed about 1.5 hectares of hardwood and mixed wood forest.

MNR officials are also investigating a .1 hectare blaze in Somerville which was apparently started by children "playing with fire," said MNR Fire Technician Ron McKenzie.

Two of the five blazes were accessible only by helicopter and two others were put out by area fire departments.

While all of the fires were relatively small, "it's been so long since we've had substantial rain, these fires go down deep into the forest's floor. Putting them out is very time-consuming," McKenzie said.

Numerous residents and recreationalists face charges or were issued warnings for violating bans on both brush burnings and camp fires, he said.

The MNR will decide today whether or not to extend the ban on camp fires and no fire permits will be issued until there is a substantial rainfall, he said.

And a heave and a ho...

Jessica Bain strains against the rope as she leads her fellow participants in the Tug of War at West Guiford's Canada Day celebrations. There were dozens of children's games organized by the hard-working recreation committee, and every child received a ribbon and candy prize. Saturday dawned dark and cool, but by the time the festivities began at noon, the sun was shining. It's never rained on West Guilford's party, which is one of the most popular way to celebrate Canada's birthday in the Highlands. For story and photos, please see page 22.
